"The Rainbow Trail"

Those who saw the thrilling story of early Utah days, "Riders of the Purple Sage," some weeks ago will appreciate the announcement that a sequel to it, entitled "The Rainbow Trail," is the feature for this week at the picture houses.

As in the "Riders of the Purple Sage," William Farnum plays the stellar role, which is one peculiarly adapted to his talents and style of acting before the camera.

"The Rainbow Trail," takes up the fortune of Lassiter, Jane Withersteen and the girl, Fay Larkin, years after they have been locked up in a lost canyon. Not only does Mr. Farnum again portray the role of Lassiter, the two-gun man and terror of the Utah border, but he also takes the part of Shefferd, a two-fisted fighting man who goes to the rescue of these imprisoned people. This dual role gives Mr. Farnum some of the most splendid opportunities of his screen career, and he rises to his opportunities like the sterling actor that he is.

"Counterfeit"

Elsie Ferguson, during her extensive career, has been called upon to do a variety of unusual things. But in "Counterfeit," for the first time she tries her hand at safe-cracking. It is quite in line with her past performances that she does a very clever and neat job. The only untoward development that mars it is the fact that the man she loves has been watching her without her knowledge and is at a loss to know her motives. This is one of the dramatic moments in "Counterfeit," a film which presents Miss Ferguson in one of the most fitting and interesting characterizations of her career.

"The Cinema Murder"

A thrilling story is unfolded under the title "The Cinema Murder." The play revolves about the supposed slaying of Douglas Romily by his cousin Philip during a fight. Elizabeth Dalston, an American actress, from a nearby bridge, takes a snapshot of the fight. She meets Philip later on a steamer and shows him the picture, but tells him from what she saw she knows he acted in self-defense. The two young people fall in love and Philip lets Elizabeth read a play he is writing. When they arrive in New York, Philip finishes the play and Elizabeth gets Power to open the new theater with it. The play and the new star are both hits. Power finds out that his playwright and his star are in love and is wildly jealous. While he is trying to get Elizabeth for himself, detectives arrive from England in search of the murderer of Douglas. Philip is placed under arrest, but the reappearance of Douglas, who was only stunned, brings matters to a satisfactory end.

"When Fate Decides"

Madeline Travers in the William Fox photoplay, "When Fate Decides," proved once more that she is an accomplished actress with great power to picture intense human emotions.

This new play gives her an acutely emotional role, and she holds her audience with a power to move them to tears or smiles at will. The story is of an unloved wife, struggling to do a hard part without sacrifice of womanly honor. True love finally crowns her, after many moments of breathless suspense over a murder mystery, in which the authorities suspect her as the slayer, while she fears the crime was committed in a quarrel by the man she loves. This situation is worked up to a very thrilling climax.

"Scarlet Days"

David Wark Griffith's new picture production, "Scarlet Days," is a story of California in the gold rush days of '49. It is based largely upon historical facts, as the central figure, called Alvarez in the film, is really Joaquin Murietta, a sort of Robin Hood of the west who used to roam the highways robbing the rich and giving to the poor. Around this chivalrous desperado Mr. Griffith has woven a story said to furnish plenty of thrills and heart interest. The locale is an old time mining town, where Rosy Nell is queen of the dance hall. She has a daughter in an eastern seminary, ignorant of her mother's past. On the very day the girl returns, Rosy becomes involved in a fight with a woman of the hall. Her opponent dies suddenly from heart failure and Rosy, accused of killing her, is about to be lynched when Alvarez appears and rescues her temporarily. The rest of the story portrays the successful efforts of the bandit and a blue blood from Virginia to save the girl from the clutches of a bully named Bagley, ending in a desperate fight and the sacrifice of Alvarez.

George P. Cooke Plans Big Dairy On Molokai

Senator George P. Cooke intends to make of the ranch on Molokai which he purchased a couple of weeks ago from his brother, Clarence H. Cooke, a supply depot of milk and other food products for the Honolulu market. The Star-Bulletin further explains Mr. Cooke's plans as follows:

Those familiar with the plans of the senator agree that there are large possibilities in the proposition. It is remarked in this connection that the distance between the Cooke ranches on Molokai is no greater than between Honolulu and Ewa.

The senator is already the head of the largest ranch business on Molokai, but only beef cattle are raised, no attention being given to milk. It is the intention to put in a herd of heavy milkers from British Columbia, an expert being now on the ground there and engaged in the work of selecting the stock.

A boat is now being constructed in Honolulu harbor to be put on this run and bring to Honolulu, either daily or every other day, fresh milk and other kinds of ranch produce. This boat will be somewhat on the sampan order, but will differ in that its freight compartments, deck, etc., will be constructed with a special view to the particular work it will be expected to undertake.

Senator Cooke states that he will enter competition independently. If the scheme is the success it promises to be, other boats may be put on and an even larger ranch on another island connected up with the system.

Col. Sam Parker Dead

Col. Samuel Parker, foreign minister of the kingdom of Hawaii under Queen Liliuokalani, and one of the most prominent Hawaiian residents of the islands, died at midnight last Friday night at his home in Honolulu. He was 66 years and 10 months of age, and had been in poor health for several years before his death.

Col. Parker was widely known and was one of the best liked men by all races in the islands. He was a candidate for delegate to congress in the first election following annexation, but was defeated by Robert Wilcox.

He was twice wed, his second wife being Mrs. James Campbell, the mother of Princess Abbie Kawanamanoa, Mrs. Robert Shingle, Mrs. Walter Macfarlane and Mrs. George Beckley. Surviving daughters are Mrs. J. F. Woods and Mrs. C. A. Widemann, and sons, Ernest N. and James K. Parker, who are well known residents.

Religion And The Home

By Rev. Hugh V. White
Pastor Kahului Union Church

"Be it ever so humble
There's no place like home."

These words from the familiar song express simply and directly the feeling of men everywhere. Home is a charmed word. It carries with it the thought of security, love, comradeship. For home is more than a house to live in. It is a circle of human companionship in which the most sacred human ties are made. The natural ties of blood are rendered more enduring by ties of the spirit and a home still holds its influence over its members long after they have been separated in the body.

The breaking up of a home which results when children grow up is only that other homes may be established. The normal course of life for the young man or woman is to leave home in order to build a home. Homes are the permanent centers of human life and they are all linked together by the ties of love and loyalty just as the whole race is of one blood.

So vital an institution is the home to human happiness that its failure always brings sorrow and loss. To preserve the home from any influence that would rob it of its power to make life wholesome and to foster harmony and good will is one of the greatest of human tasks.

Such a service can be fully rendered only by religion, for for the spirit of the home is essentially religious. No home can endure without love, unselfishness and the willingness of each to subordinate personal desires to the interests of the home. It is just this spirit that religion consists in and the development of the religious life lays the firm foundation for the home that can endure.

Religion sanctifies human ties by making men conscious of their spirit-
